

The MultiCultural Center presents Resilient Love Series

What happens now? Forging a revolutionary feminist future ahead

Sophia Armen

Attacks on marginalized communities have been rampant in the past several years. With the upcoming consequential election, the future remains unknown. Join Sophia Armen, a nationally-recognized feminist community organizer, on what a future looks like rooted in dignity, love, and liberation. Process the election results together and learn about what frontline feminist movements are calling for. Our responsibility is to each other, and through the power of love and critical transformation, we can meet this moment to demand so much more for our communities. Join in a conversation on the state of feminism, the promise and peril of this moment, and where we go from here.

Sophia Armen is a Middle Eastern-American feminist community organizer and writer. She is the co-founder and serves as the Co-Director of The Feminist Front, a national gender, queer, and racial justice organization of 15-35 year olds building rooted feminist futures. Armen was the first Middle Eastern-American woman elected student body president in the history of the University of California, Santa Barbara. Her work has appeared in Vice News, Ms. Magazine, The Middle East Eye, NPR, The Feminist Realities Magazine, among others, and in a cover story for The Los Angeles Times.
